Even without the gut-busting spirit of the vocal stomp of queen Beyoncé USA, the first trailer for Everything, everything feels like an emotional roller coaster ride. The film (and the relevant trailer) adapted from Nicola Yun's young adult novel about an 18-year-old quarantined child in her home is bound to bring some tears. Meanwhile, the song in the trailer titled Runnin' (Lose It All) - which co-produced from English producer Naughty Boy with Goddess Mother (Bey) and Arrow Benjamin - did it darndest to add to the emotional value. Songs on everything, everything the trailer you feel you need to leave your office job now and go to the beach because life is so short. Frankly this trailer may be considered NSFW for this reason because the vibe was definitely helped by fast-paced background tracks. The film follows Maddy (Amendella Stenberg of the Hunger Games), a teenager who spent her entire childhood inside her home due to a mysterious immunodeficiency. His only companions for his childhood include his mother, an overly protective doctor and his nanny. Then, the neighbor's new son comes knocking on the door, bundt cake in hand, and it's love at first glance. In a Romano and Juliet-Ask twist, Maddy's mother is not a fan of her daughter's neighbor Boyff, Ollie. But despite Mom's reservations, teens love soaking up Runnin', runnin', runnin', runnin' so that Maddy can experience as she put it, everything, everything, or at least, a full day before she (possibly) dies. The power of the devil's son describes people oblivious to their personal hangs and chasing each other despite it all. The lyrics to These four walls have only changed the way I feel and it doesn't run away from myself anymore almost seem to have been made specifically for the film. But, in fact they weren't, the song actually came out in September 2015. Even the music video, which features a couple running after each other while underwater feels similar to the heavy ocean vibe of everything, is the trailer of everything. It's as if the song didn't reach its full potential until now. Combining song jazz and trailers does a great job of reminding us how short life can be and yet how long it feels without adventure, or love. They are also both as a reminder that being true to yourself is the only way to be in love. There was a lot of emotion in a two-minute period to all of us brought by this jazz band's trailer/trailer. Get ready for all your emotions to get to a final resting place when everything, everything premieres May 19! If this trailer brings tears to your eye, chances are you'll have buckets of tears crying passionately throughout the film. It's almost like... Ocean? It's appropriate, right? The singer/women's active wear designer/world domination is just one of many music artists turned to their songs into grindhouse movie posters. MusiXpotation is a collection of posters for films that only exist in the hearts of Rabi fans. In the late 1990s, Ostad Pay was releasing full-length narrative films with the same titles as his albums, which were somehow the fictional backgrounds of Lemonade with some serious dialogues. The new series is a glimpse into the world where that practice caught up with the entire music industry. The series, created by Paris-based artistic director David Redon, features blaxploitation-style posters for songs and albums by Amy Winehouse, 2pac and Jay-Z. (Previous Redon was crushed. With vintage ads.) Some are thematically appropriate, such as Frank Ocean's Galactic, Spooky Pyramids, and others undoubtedly make their names very uncomfortable, such as the abuse of Laverne Hill becoming a bikini bank caper dees. Like Quentin Taramino's recent book covers featured in Co.Create, some entries marred by almost poor comic Photoshop. The ones that hit the mark, though, like Tyler the creator of The Yonkers Core Panic, hit it hard. Take a look at more posters on the slides above. [via Phobia] Fubiz]
